THE SHIFT

Your life got bigger. Did your coverage?

Bigger income, bigger mortgage, teenagers, maybe a business — and often a policy still sized for a younger you. At this stage the danger isn't having no coverage; it's coverage that quietly fell behind your life. Four things to check.

1 A coverage gap-check

Is your life insurance still enough for today's income, mortgage balance, and the kids' futures? Coverage bought years ago is often thousands short now.

2 Supplement your disability

Group coverage through work caps out and rarely covers bonus or commission. At peak earnings, that gap is biggest — a supplemental policy closes it.

3 Umbrella / asset protection

As your assets grow, so does what a lawsuit can reach. Umbrella liability adds a big layer of protection over your home and auto for a low yearly cost.

4 Start LTC & retirement planning

Long-term care and retirement income get cheaper and easier the earlier you plan. Starting in your 40s–50s beats scrambling later.

If you own a business, add this

Business-owner dads should also look at a buy-sell agreement, key-person coverage, and business overhead expense disability — protection for the thing that funds everything else.

A 15-MINUTE GAP-CHECK

Find the gaps, fix the biggest first

You're busy, so keep it simple. This quick pass tells you where you're exposed and what to fix first.

1

Add it up

Compare your current coverage against today's income, debts, and goals. The difference is your gap.

2

Fix the biggest gaps first

Usually that's your life insurance amount and your disability coverage — the two that carry the most weight.

3

Protect assets & plan ahead

Add umbrella liability, and start the long-term care and retirement conversation while it's early and cheap.

"Has my coverage kept up with my life?"

Odds are your income has grown, your mortgage has changed, and the kids' needs look different than when you first bought coverage. The right amount is one that matches today's life — not the one you had a decade ago. A quick review with an agent settles it.
